OCTOBER TERM, 1979

No. ....

STATE OF MISSOURI,

Petitioner,

ALL STAR NEWS AGENCY, INC.,

*Respondent.PETITION FOR A WRIT OF CERTIORARI TO THE SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI

Petitioner, The State of Missouri, prays that a writ of certiorari issue to review the judgment and opinion of the Supreme Court of Missouri entered in this proceeding on April 10, 1979.

OPINION BELOW

The opinion of the Supreme Court of Missouri is reported at 580 S.W.2d 245 (Mo. banc 1979). In that court the case was styled and numbered as follows: State of Missouri, Respondent v. All Star News Agency, Inc., Appellant (2 cases), Nos. 60,609 and 60,616 in the Supreme Court of Missouri. A copy of the opinion is reprinted in Appendix A.

JURISDICTION

Judgment was entered in the Supreme Court of Missouri on April 10, 1979. A motion for rehearing was denied May 17, 1979, and this petition is filed within ninety days of that date. This Court's jurisdiction is invoked under 28 U.S.C. §1254(1).

QUESTIONS PRESENTED

1. Whether §542.281(5), RSMo 1975 Supp., necessarily imposes a constitutionally impermissible prior restraint on materials presumptively protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution.
2. Whether the restraint of presumptively protected materials for a ten-day period prior to the commencement of an adversary hearing to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that those materials are obscene constitutes a constitutionally impermissible prior restraint.

CONSTITUTIONAL AND STATUTORY PROVISIONS INVOLVED

United States Constitution, First Amendment, reads as follows:

"Congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof; or abridging the freedom of speech, or of the press, or the right of the people peaceably to assemble, and to petition the government for a redress of grievances."

United States Constitution, Fourth Amendment, reads as follows:

"The right of the people to be secure in their persons, houses, papers and effects against unreasonable searches and seizures shall not be violated, and no warrants shall issue but upon probable cause, supported by oath or affirmation, and particularly describing the place to be searched, and the persons or things to be seized."

United States Constitution, Fourteenth Amendment, reads in pertinent part as follows:

"Section 1. All persons born or naturalized in the United States and subject to the jurisdiction thereof are citizens of the United States and of the state wherein they reside. No state shall make or enforce any law which shall abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens of the United States, nor shall any state deprive any person of life, liberty or property without due process of law, nor deny to any person within its jurisdiction the equal protection of the laws."

Sections 542.281 and 542.301, RSMo 1975 Supp., are set forth in Appendix B.

STATEMENT OF THE CASE

Most of the pertinent facts are set forth in the opinion handed down by the Supreme Court of Missouri on April 10, 1979. State v. All Star News Agency, Inc., 580 S.W.2d 245 (Mo. banc 1979). This statement of the case will begin by quoting extensively from the opinion of the Supreme Court of Missouri before concluding by presenting the additional facts which were not outlined in that court's opinion. (It should be noted that respondent All Star News Agency, Inc., is referred to throughout the opinion of the Supreme Court of Missouri as "Appellant.")

"This appeal involves two civil proceedings, consolidated here and at trial, wherein the State seeks forfeiture and destruction, under §§ 542.281 and 542.301.3, RSMo Supp. 1975 of magazines and movies seized from appellant. Appellant was a wholesale distributor of magazines and movies in St. Louis.

The statutes involved provide a civil procedure whereby the State may search for, seize, and destroy obscene material. In general terms they provide, where twenty or more items are at issue, for a four-stage process. First, upon application of the State to a court for a warrant to search for and seize obscene material, the dealer or exhibitor of the obscene matter must be given notice and an adversary hearing. Once notice is received, any removal or alteration of the material at issue is punishable by contempt. Second, an adversary hearing must be held before a search warrant for such material may issue. The purpose of the hearing is to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that the material is located where alleged and will ultimately be found to be obscene. Third, if a warrant issues, a determination of obscenity is made by an advisory jury. Fourth, the trial judge determines, after the jury verdict, whether the material is obscene or not obscene as a matter of law. If the material is obscene, an order of forfeiture and destruction issues.

The proceedings at issue in this appeal are virtually identical except that one involves the seizure solely of movie films while the other involves the seizure solely of magazines. Over 1,000 films were seized. Nearly 13,000 magazines were seized.

The first proceeding was commenced on September 9, 1977, by issuance and service upon appellant of a Notice of Adversary Hearing. The notice listed the material for which a search warrant was being sought and in substance stated, as provided by § 542.281.5, that 'After service of notice of the hearing, intentional alteration, destruction, or removal of any matter, or duplicate of matter, described in the notice shall be punished as contempt of court.' A police officer was stationed at appellant's warehouse to insure that no material was removed.

The adversary hearing began September 19, 1977. This proceeding involved movie films.

The second proceeding progressed similarly. It commenced on September 21, 1977, by issuance and service of a Notice of Adversary Hearing. The notice contained the same warning against removal or alteration of the material listed as in the proceeding involving movie films. A police officer was stated at appellant's warehouse to insure that no material was removed. The adversary hearing was held September 23, 1977. This proceeding involved magazines." Id. at 246-247.

On January 11, 1978, the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis ordered the forfeiture and destruction of the many magazines and films which had been declared obscene in those two civil proceedings which were described above. Those two proceedings were consolidated at trial and on appeal to the Supreme Court of Missouri; they remain consolidated before this Court.

The Supreme Court of Missouri reversed and remanded in an opinion rendered April 10, 1979. The reversal and remand was premised on the Missouri Supreme Court's conclusion that the materials in question had been subjected to a constitutionally impermissible prior restraint between the time the notices of adversary hearing were served and the adversary hearings were held. A motion for rehearing was denied May 17, 1979. A writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of Missouri is being sought pursuant to 28 U.S.C. §1254(1).

REASONS FOR GRANTING THE WRIT

This petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted primarily because, in reversing the decision of the Circuit Court of the City of St. Louis, the Supreme Court of Missouri misinterpreted some prior decisions of this Court and overlooked others. In addition, certiorari should be granted because the Supreme Court of Missouri has rendered impotent a statutory scheme that was designed to be and can be a valuable tool in curtailing the operations of distributors of obscene materials.

The reversal and remand in this case was premised on the Missouri Supreme Court's conclusion that the materials in question had been subjected to a constitutionally impermissible prior restraint between the time the notices of adversary hearing were served and the adversary hearings were held. The prior restraint which was held to be constitutionally impermissible was the result of the application of the following provision of §542.281(5), RSMo 1975 Supp.:

"After service of notice of the hearing, intentional alteration, destruction, or removal of any matter, or duplicate of matter, described in the notice shall be punished as contempt of court."

The foregoing provision was included in notices served on respondent. In reversing and remanding, and in questioning the propriety of the foregoing statutory provision in the course of doing so, the Missouri Supreme Court misinterpreted some prior decisions of this Court and overlooked others.

This case arose in a unique factual setting which found thousands of allegedly obscene magazines and films stored in a massive pornography warehouse operated by respondent. In striving for the forfeiture and destruction of the allegedly obscene material, petitioner utilized its civil anti-obscenity statutes. Respondent was served with notices of adversary hearing which included references to the foregoing statutory provision and received those adversary hearings shortly thereafter within the time contemplated by the law. The prior restraint which the Missouri Supreme Court ruled was constitutionally impermissible took place between the time of the service of the notices of adversary hearing and the adversary hearings themselves. The first proceeding began when a notice of adversary hearing was served upon the respondent on September 9, 1977; the materials listed in the notice were allegedly obscene films. The initial adversary hearing itself commenced September 19, 1977. Two days later, on September 21, 1977, a second notice of adversary hearing was served upon respondent, this one listing allegedly obscene magazines. This second adversary hearing was held September 23, 1977. Consequently, the prior restraint which was held to be constitutionally impermissible by the Missouri Supreme Court lasted ten days for the films and two days for the magazines. This particular prior restraint was a constitutionally permissible one and the Missouri Supreme Court overlooked material matters of law and fact in holding to the contrary.

The Missouri Supreme Court's opinion cited five United States Supreme Court cases and then listed five "teachings" of those cases. 580 S.W.2d at 247. However, the cited cases do not support the following two "teachings" as construed by the Missouri Supreme Court's opinion:

"(3) that a prior restraint of one copy of each magazine or film alleged to be obscene may be permissible in order that a determination of the question of probable obscenity may be made.

"(5) that a restraint, prior to a judicial adversary hearing, of more material than is necessary for determination of the question of probable obscenity is constitutionally impermissible." Id.

Since the foregoing "teachings" as construed by the Missouri Supreme Court are not supported by the five cited United States Supreme Court cases or by any others, the Missouri Supreme Court had no authority to apply those "teachings" as the law. Particular attention should be paid to Oregon v. Hass, 420 U.S. 714, 95 S.Ct. 1215, 43 L.Ed.2d 570 (1975), wherein this Court reversed a decision of the Oregon Supreme Court which had been premised on a more restrictive interpretation of United States Supreme Court decisions than was permissible. In doing so, this Court referred to its earlier expressions

"that a State is free as a matter of its own law to impose greater restrictions on police activity than those this Court holds to be necessary upon Federal Constitutional standards [citations omitted] but, of course, a State may not impose such greater restrictions as a matter of federal constitutional law when this Court specifically refrains from imposing them." Id., 420 U.S. at 719.

See also North Carolina v. Butler, ..... U.S. ...., 99 S.Ct. 1755, 1759, ..... L.Ed.2d ..... (1979).

Consequently, the Missouri Supreme Court went beyond its authority in interpreting the United States Supreme Court cases as upholding the foregoing "teachings."

The Missouri Supreme Court apparently used those two "teachings" in reaching its conclusion that the restraint of all copies of the magazines and films listed in the notices of adversary hearing between the time those notices were served and the adversary hearings were held was constitutionally impermissible. However, that court's reliance on those "teachings" overlooks the unique factual setting in which this case arose. Respondent was operating a massive pornography warehouse which contained numerous copies of the allegedly obscene magazines and films. If only one copy of each magazine and film had been restrained, then the utilization of the civil anti-obscenity statutes in this case would have been to no avail. Respondent could simply have removed the additional copies of those magazines and movies. The one case cited by the Missouri Supreme Court which dealt with the single copy concept was Heller v. New York, 413 U.S. 483, 93 S.Ct. 2789, 37 L.Ed.2d 745 (1973). However, in that case this Court was comparing the seizing of a single copy of a film for the purpose of preserving it as evidence in a criminal proceeding with the seizing of films to destroy them or to block their distribution or exhibition. Id., 413 U.S. at 492. The instant case did not present a situation in which there was a seizing of films and/or magazines to destroy them or to block their distribution or exhibition; rather, the instant case presents a situation in which a pornography wholesaler faced the risk of contempt of Court if it chose to remove or distribute the items listed in the notices of adversary hearing. In this type of situation, a restraint on only one copy of the various items would have been meaningless. This was not a criminal prosecution such as was involved in Heller v. New York; rather, it was a civil proceeding in which petitioner was seeking the forfeiture and destruction of certain obscene magazines and films. In that sense there was no basis for the Missouri Supreme Court's reliance on a single copy concept.

As the foregoing discussion indicates, the primary problem with the "teachings" outlined in the Missouri Supreme Court's opinion is that they overlook some other well established principles of law. That is perhaps the primary reason why this petition should be granted. While any system of prior restraint comes to the court bearing a heavy presumption against its constitutional validity, Bantam Books v. Sullivan, 372 U.S. 58, 70, 83 S.Ct. 631, 9 L.Ed.2d 584 (1963), prior restraints are not unconstitutional per se. Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. 546, 558, 95 S.Ct. 1239, 43 L.Ed.2d 448 (1975). Rather, in assessing the validity of a given restraint, a court is obliged to look at the application of the statute in question to the facts of the case before it to determine whether the restraint being imposed rises to an impermissible level. Roaden v. Kentucky, 413 U.S. 496, 501, 93 S.Ct. 2796, 37 L.Ed.2d 757 (1973); G. I. Distributors, Inc. v. Murphy, 490 F.2d 1167, 1169 (2nd Cir. 1973), cert. denied, 416 U.S. 939, 94 S.Ct. 1941, 40 L.Ed.2d 290 (1974). The restraint imposed in the instant case was sufficiently limited in time and nature, and justified in principle, to keep it within the realm of the permissible.

It has been suggested that certain temporary restraints may be justified while necessary judicial proceedings are under way. Southeastern Promotions, Ltd. v. Conrad, 420 U.S. at 557, 559. In that case, this Court outlined in detail the procedural safeguards necessary to render a prior restraint lawful.

"First, the burden of instituting judicial proceedings, and of proving that the material is unprotected, must rest on the censor. Second, any restraint prior to judicial review can be imposed only for a specified brief period and only for the purpose of preserving the status quo. Third, a prompt final judicial determination must be assured." Id. at 560.

See also Blount v. Rizzi, 400 U.S. 410, 417, 91 S.Ct. 423, 27 L.Ed.2d 498 (1971); Freedman v. Maryland, 380 U.S. 51, 58-59, 85 S.Ct. 734, 13 L.Ed.2d 649 (1965).

Applying these standards, the restraint created by the notices of adversary hearing in the instant case appears reasonable. It is the second procedural safeguard which could conceivably present a problem in this case. However, the restraint imposed by the notices in advance of a judicial determination of probable cause was limited to ten days as to the films and two days as to the magazines. The particular restraint imposed was only that necessary to prevent any removal or destruction of the materials. There was no actual physical seizure, but merely the threat of contempt imposed for any removal of the described materials. See Kingsley Books, Inc. v. Brown, 354 U.S. 436, 442-443, 77 S.Ct. 1325, 1 L.Ed.2d 1469 (1957). The period utilized by the trial court in assessing the materials given it for consideration at the adversary hearings can be readily characterized as a fixed period compatible with sound judicial discretion. If the distributors of challenged materials are going to request that those materials be carefully scrutinized in obscenity determinations, they must allow adequate time for such scrutiny. Furthermore, after reviewing the procedure employed by customs officials in seizing allegedly obscene photographs, this Court noted in United States v. Thirty-seven (37) Photographs, 402 U.S. 363, 373, 91 S.Ct. 1400, 28 L.Ed.2d 822 (1971), that seizure of allegedly obscene materials would come within its procedural mandates if the judicial forfeiture proceedings are begun within fourteen days of the seizure and if the period between the filing of the action and the final decision of the trial court is no longer than sixty days. While not exactly analogous, the restraint effected by the notices of adversary hearing in the instant case falls easily within those boundaries.

A further justification for the contempt warning in the notice lies in the reasonable concern that, without the prohibition on removal, the distributor might utilize the time period between the service of the notice of adversary hearing and the adversary hearing itself for the removal of allegedly obscene items in order to avoid their destruction or prosecution. The distributor, given notice of an adversary hearing for its own benefit, must not be allowed to pervert that notice to avoid obscenity statutes. Kingsley Books, Inc. v. Brown, 354 U.S. at 440. The contempt warning in the notice reduces the possibility of abuse by the wholesaler of allegedly obscene magazines and movies.

In addition, as noted earlier, the type of restraint imposed here, a threat of contempt citation for removal of certain described materials, is not an absolute restraint of the type imposed by seizure; it simply prohibited respondent from removing materials unprotected because of their obscene nature. The restraint of a particular item could be challenged by defiance of the order, coupled with the claim of nonobscenity as a defense to the contempt citation. Id. at 442-443. Applying the foregoing principles to the facts of the instant case, it cannot be said that the restraint imposed was a constitutionally impermissible one. The Supreme Court of Missouri had no basis for holding that the prior restraint imposed during the limited time period between the service of the notices of adversary hearing and the adversary hearings themselves was a constitutionally impermissible one.

In effect, the Missouri Supreme Court has rendered useless a statutory scheme that was designed to be and can be a valuable tool in combating the distribution of obscene materials. By implicitly holding that §542.281 (5), RSMo 1975 Supp., necessarily imposes a constitutionally impermissible prior restraint on materials presumptively protected by the First Amendment to the United States Constitution, the Missouri Supreme Court has rendered impotent Missouri's civil anti-obscenity statutes. There is simply no reason to utilize the statutes if the contempt warning cannot be placed in the notice of adversary hearing. As noted earlier, without the prohibition on removal, the distributor of obscene materials might utilize the time period between the service of the notice of adversary hearing and the adversary hearing itself for the removal of the allegedly obscene items in order to avoid their forfeiture and destruction. The contempt warning in the notice, which has a limited life span, reduces the possibility of abuse by the wholesaler of allegedly obscene magazines and films. The Missouri Supreme Court opinion apparently means that the statutory scheme can pass constitutional muster only if the contempt warning is issued for one copy of the listed magazines and films rather than all copies. However, the issuance of a contempt warning for only one copy of the allegedly obscene magazines and films would be an exercise in futility. The purpose of the statutory scheme is to bring about the forfeiture and destruction of obscene materials. That statutory scheme is useless if the State of Missouri has to issue a notice of adversary hearing for each copy of an allegedly obscene magazine or film. The distributor of obscene materials can simply dispose of the copies and suffer the inconvenience of forfeiting one copy so that that one copy can be destroyed. In the instant case, for example, respondent All Star News Agency, Inc., could have sold all but one copy of each allegedly obscene magazine and film had the contempt warning in the notice of adversary hearing been applicable only to one copy. The importance of this case is that the Missouri Supreme Court has rendered useless a statutory scheme which could be invaluable in putting distributors of obscene, i.e., constitutionally unprotected, materials out of business. This petition for a writ of certiorari should be granted because the Supreme Court of Missouri accomplished this by misinterpreting some prior decisions of this Court and overlooking others.

On June 11, 1979, this Court reached its decision in Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York, ..... U.S. ...., 99 S.Ct. 2319, ..... L.Ed.2d ..... (1979). It was held in that case that an open-ended search warrant for obscene materials which left it entirely to the discretion of the officials conducting the search to decide what items were likely obscene and to accomplish their seizure was constitutionally invalid. Id., 99 S.Ct. at 2324. In the instant case there was an issue before the Supreme Court of Missouri dealing with the propriety of what respondent All Star News Agency, Inc., considered to be open-ended search warrants. Since the Supreme Court of Missouri did not reach that particular issue in reversing and remanding the case, this Court's decision in Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York, supra, does not render moot the issues being presented in this petition for a writ of certiorari. Even if it is assumed that some of the materials seized from respondent All Star News Agency, Inc., were seized under authority of constitutionally invalid search warrants, there is still a reason to grant this writ because many of the items seized were sufficiently specified in the search warrants. There was no open-ended search warrant problem with many of the materials seized in the proceedings declared invalid for other reasons by the Missouri Supreme Court. In other words, the fact that this Court has decided Lo-Ji Sales, Inc. v. New York should have no impact on the decision as to whether certiorari should be granted in the instant case.

By granting certiorari in this case, this Court will have the opportunity to consider issues of extreme importance to states which have enacted and are considering enacting civil anti-obscenity statutes.

CONCLUSION

For the above and foregoing reasons, the petition for a writ of certiorari to the Supreme Court of Missouri should be granted.

APPENDIX A

STATE OF MISSOURI,
Respondent,

v.

ALL STAR NEWS AGENCY, INC.,
Appellant (two cases).

Nos. 60609, 60616.

SUPREME COURT OF MISSOURI,
En Banc

April 10, 1979

Rehearing Denied May 17, 1979

PER CURIAM:

This appeal involves two civil proceedings, consolidated here and at trial, wherein the State seeks forfeiture and destruction, under §§542.281 and 542.301.3, RSMo Supp. 1975 of magazines and movies seized from appellant. Appellant was a wholesale distributor of magazines and movies in St. Louis.

The statutes involved provide a civil procedure whereby the State may search for, seize, and destroy obscene material. In general terms they provide, where twenty or more items are at issue, for a four-stage process. First, upon application of the State to a court for a warrant to search for and seize obscene material, the dealer or exhibitor of the obscene matter must be given notice and an adversary hearing. Once notice is received, any reremoval or alteration of the material at issue is punishable by contempt. Second, an adversary hearing must be held before a search warrant for such material may issue. The purpose of the hearing is to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that the material is located where alleged and will ultimately be found to be obscene. Third, if a warrant issues, a determination of obscenity is made by an advisory jury. Fourth, the trial judge determines, after the jury verdict, whether the material is obscene or not obscene as a matter of law. If the material is obscene, an order of forfeiture and destruction issues.

The proceedings at issue in this appeal are virtually identical except that one involves the seizure solely of movie films while the other involves the seizure solely of magazines. Over 1,000 films were seized. Nearly 13,000 magazines were seized.

The first proceeding was commenced on September 9, 1977, by issuance and service upon appellant of a Notice of Adversary Hearing. The notice listed the material for which a search warrant was being sought and in substance stated, as provided by §542.281.5, that "After service of notice of the hearing, intentional alteration, destruction, or removal of any matter, or duplicate of matter, described in the notice shall be punished as contempt of court." A police officer was stationed at appellant's warehouse to insure that no material was removed.

The adversary hearing began September 19, 1977. This proceeding involved movie films.

The second proceeding progressed similarly. It commenced on September 21, 1977, by issuance and service of a Notice of Adversary Hearing. The notice contained the same warning against removal or alteration of the material listed as in the proceeding involving movie films. A police officer was stationed at appellant's warehouse to insure that no material was removed. The adversary hearing was held September 23, 1977. This proceeding involved magazines.

The cases pertinent to this appeal are Kingsley Books, Inc. v. Brown, 354 U.S. 436, 77 S.Ct. 1325, 1 L.Ed.2d 1469 (1957); Marcus v. Search Warrant, 367 U.S. 717, 81 S.Ct. 1708, 6 L.Ed.2d 1127 (1961); A Quantity of Books, et al. v. Kansas, 378 U.S. 205, 84 S.Ct. 1723, 12 L.Ed.2d 809 (1964); Heller v. New York, 413 U.S. 483, 93 S.Ct. 2789, 37 L.Ed.2d 745 (1973); and Roaden v. Kentucky, 413 U.S. 496, 93 S.Ct. 2796, 37 L.Ed.2d 757 (1973).

[1-5] In our opinion, insofar as they pertain to the facts and issues on this appeal, the teachings of these cases are:

- (1) that all materials alleged to be obscene are presumptively protected under the First Amendment.
- (2) that, as a general proposition, no restraint on dissemination of presumptively protected material prior to a judicial adversary hearing on the question of probable obscenity is constitutionally permissible.
- (3) that a prior restraint of one copy of each magazine or film alleged to be obscene may be permissible in order that a determination of the question of probable obscenity may be made.
- (4) that the ultimate purpose of the taking of such copy (for use as evidence at a criminal trial; for use as evidence in an injunction proceeding; or for destruction) is irrelevant.
- (5) that a restraint, prior to a judicial adversary hearing, of more material than is necessary for a determination of the question of probable obscenity is constitutionally impermissible.

[6] In the instant case, there were restraints of all copies of magazines and movies in the warehouse between the time the notices of adversary hearing were served and the adversary hearings were held. There were prior restraints of materials presumptively protected under the First Amendment. This was constitutionally impermissible under the First, Fourth, and Fourteenth Amendments. Since a violation of these Amendments infected the proceedings, in order to vindicate appellant's constitutional rights the judgments must be reversed, and the causes remanded for further proceedings not inconsistent with this opinion. Marcus, supra, 367 U.S., l.c. 738, 81 S.Ct. 1708.

The judgments are reversed and the causes remanded.

MORGAN, C. J., and BARDGETT, RENDLEN, SIMEONE and WELLIVER, JJ., concur.

DONNELLY, Judge, concurring.

These are the latest in a line of cases in which we deal with the question of obscenity by application of law announced by the United States Supreme Court. I concur, but, at the risk of being considered presumptuous, have some observations to make.

In Roth v. United States, 354 U.S. 476, 77 S.Ct. 1304, 1 L.Ed.2d 1498 (1957), the United States Supreme Court began to seriously grapple with the question of obscenity.

It would serve no useful purpose here for me to describe the twists and turns which culminated in Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419 (1973). It is enough to note that the author of Roth has reached the conclusion "that the time has come to make a significant departure" from the Roth approach. Paris Adult Theatre I v. Slaton, 413 U.S. 49, 73, 74, 93 S.Ct. 2628, 2642, 37 L.Ed.2d 446 (1973) (Brennan, J., dissenting).

For me, the problem of regulating obscenity involves an attempt to reconcile two competing interests: the right to speak freely and the right to privacy. The right to speak freely needs no explication from me. It is the favorite of all libertarians and has properly dominated the thinking of our people throughout the history of our Nation. The right to enjoy life (from which the right to privacy derives) has not received the literary attention it deserves.

In December, 1890, Samuel D. Warren and Louis D. Brandeis noted that "in very early times, the law gave a remedy only for physical interference with life," but that later "there came a recognition of man's spiritual nature, of his feelings and his intellect. Gradually the scope of these legal rights broadened; and now the right to life has come to mean the right to enjoy life,—the right to be let alone * * *." Warren & Brandeis, The Right to Privacy, 4 Harv.L.Rev. 193 (1890). Nearly thirty-eight years later, in different context, Mr. Justice Brandeis referred to "the right to be let alone—the most comprehensive of rights and the right most valued by civilized men." Olmstead v. United States, 277 U.S. 438, 478, 48 S.Ct. 564, 572, 72 L.Ed. 944 (1928) (Brandeis, J., dissenting).

How does all of this relate to obscenity? In my view, unsolicited obscenity is an assault on the spiritual nature, the feelings and the intellect of the individual. It is an assault on the right to privacy. It is an assault on the right to be let alone. When a person is exposed to obscenity involuntarily, it violates "the right most valued by civilized men."

In my view, when obscenity is at issue, and a choice must be made between the right to speak freely and the right to privacy—the right to be let alone, the right to speak freely must yield.

If such concept were adopted, I would anticipate the following results:

(1) that obscenity would be protected by the First Amendment and that the right to communicate obscenity to prior consenting adults would be absolute. The right to be let alone can be waived and would be waived by prior consenting adults.

(2) that although obscenity were protected by the First Amendment, the right to communicate obscenity would be accommodated to the right of persons generally not to be exposed to it—to be let alone. This would give recognition to an overriding concern where state interests of protecting children and unconsenting adults were involved. See Redrup v. New York, 386 U.S. 767, 769, 87 S.Ct. 1414, 18 L.Ed.2d 515 (1967).

(3) that a new definition of obscenity would be adopted. If it were established law that the freedom to communicate obscenity to prior consenting adults is absolute, a definition of obscenity which would fully serve state interests of protecting children and unconsenting adults would seem appropriate. Certainly, limiting proscriptions of offensive material to hard-core pornography would be grossly inappropriate. See Miller v. California, 413 U.S. 15, 93 S.Ct. 2607, 37 L.Ed.2d 419 (1973).

(4) that the essential problem in obscenity cases would shift from one of defining "obscenity" to one of defining "prior consent." Hopefully, this problem would prove less intractable.

(5) that any prior restraint on the right to communicate obscenity would violate the First Amendment. See Emerson, The Doctrine of Prior Restraint, 20 Law & Contemp.Prob. 648 (1955).

Of course, the scholars will recognize that the concepts I espouse today emanate from the writings of Sir William Blackstone (4 W. Blackstone, Commentaries 151-152):

"The liberty of the press is indeed essential to the nature of a free state; but this consists in laying no previous restraints upon publications, and not in freedom from censure for criminal matter when published. Every freeman has an undoubted right to lay what sentiments he pleases before the public; to forbid this is to destroy the freedom of the press; but if he publishes what is improper, mischievous, or illegal, he must take the consequence of his own temerity. To subject the press to the restrictive power of a licenser, as was formerly done, both before and since the revolution, is to subject all freedom of sentiment to the prejudices of one man, and make him the arbitrary and infallible judge of all controverted points in learning, religion, and government. But to punish (as the law does at present) any dangerous or offensive writings, which, when published, shall on a fair and impartial trial be adjudged of a pernicious tendency, is necessary for the preservation of peace and good order, of government and religion, the only solid foundations of civil liberty. Thus the will of individuals is still left free; the abuse only of that free will is the object of legal punishment. Neither is any restraint hereby laid upon freedom of thought or inquiry; liberty of private sentiment is still left; the disseminating or making public of bad sentiments, destructive of the ends of society, is the crime which society corrects."

My views also reflect the provisions of the Missouri Constitution (Mo. Const. Art. I, §§2 and 8). However, it would serve no useful purpose to implement the Missouri Constitution so long as we are constrained by the approach of Roth and its successors.

On May 17, 1979, the Supreme Court of Missouri overruled the State of Missouri's timely motion for rehearing by making the following order: "Respondent's motion for rehearing and alternatively, motion for 90 day stay of mandate, overruled."

APPENDIX B

Section 542.281, RSMo 1975 Supp., reads as follows:

542.281. Obscene matter, search warrant for—transcript of proceedings—hearing on obscenity—alteration of material after notice of hearing prohibited.—1. Any police officer, sheriff or deputy sheriff may make application for the issuance of a search warrant to search for and seize:

(1) Obscene matter being held or displayed for sale, exhibition, distribution, or circulation to the public, if such matter is of such a nature that the average person, applying contemporary community standards would find that the matter, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest, if the matter depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined by Missouri law as obscene, and if the matter, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value.

(2) Property which has been used by the owner, or used with his consent, as a raw material or as an instrument to publish or produce such obscene matter.

2. A warrant to search for obscene matter being held or displayed for sale, exhibition, distribution, or circulation or for property which has been used as a raw material or as an instrument to publish or produce such obscene matter may be issued by a judge of the circuit court in the county or judicial district in which the alleged matter or property is located. Except as provided in this section, the issuance of a warrant to search for and seize obscene matter shall be governed by the provisions of section 542.276.

3. A copy or photograph of the allegedly obscene matter may be annexed to the application. The application and the warrant, if issued, shall designate precisely by title, or otherwise, each item or type of item to be searched for and seized. No warrant shall be issued to search for and seize any item or type of item unless the judge determines there is probable cause to believe that each item or type of item sought is obscene as defined by law, and is being held or displayed for sale, exhibition, distribution, or circulation to the public.

4. A transcript shall be made of all proceedings under this section and under subsections 3 and 4 of section 542.301.

5. If more than twenty items are to be seized, or if the item to be seized is a motion picture film being exhibited to the public, the judge shall hold an adversary hearing to determine whether such matter is obscene before issuing a warrant. Not less than twenty-four hours before such hearing, written notice of the date, time, place and nature of the hearing, including a description of the matter sought, shall be personally served upon the dealer, exhibiter, displayer or his agent. No warrant shall be issued without the dealer, distributor, or displayer being given a reasonable opportunity to appear in opposition to the issuance. Except when the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer consents to a longer period, or by his actions or pleadings, willfully prevents the prompt resolution of the hearing, a decision shall be rendered no later than ten days from the date of the commencement of the hearing. The hearing shall determine whether the average person, applying contemporary community standards would find that the matter sought, taken as a whole, appeals to the prurient interest, whether the matter sought depicts or describes, in a patently offensive way, sexual conduct specifically defined as obscene by the laws of this state, and whether the matter sought, taken as a whole, lacks serious literary, artistic, political, or scientific value. Upon determination that there is probable cause to believe the matter sought is obscene, the judge shall issue a warrant to search for and seize it. After service of notice of the hearing, intentional alteration, destruction, or removal of any matter, or duplicate of matter, described in the notice shall be punished as contempt of court.

542.286. Warrant to be executed within territorial jurisdiction, exception.—1. A warrant to search a person or any movable thing may be executed in any part of the state where the person or thing is found if, subsequent to the filing of the application, the person or thing moves or is taken out of the territorial jurisdiction of the judge issuing the warrant.

2. All other search warrants shall be executed within the territorial jurisdiction of the court out of which the warrant issued and within the territorial jurisdiction of the officer executing the warrant.

Section 542.301, RSMo 1975 Supp., reads in pertinent part as follows:

542.301. Disposition of unclaimed seized property-forfeiture to the state, when-allegedly obscene matter, how treated-appeal authorized.

3. (1) When a warrant has been issued to search for and seize allegedly obscene matter after an adversary hearing, the judge, upon return of the warrant with the matter seized, shall give notice of the fact to the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the matter was seized and the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer and shall conduct further adversary proceedings to determine whether the matter is subject to forfeiture. If the evidence is clear and convincing that the matter is obscene as defined by law and it was being held or displayed for sale, exhibition, distribution, or circulation to the public, the judge shall declare it to be obscene and forfeited to the state and order its destruction. However, no forfeiture shall be declared without the dealer, distributor, or displayer being given a reasonable opportunity to appear in opposition and without the judge having thoroughly examined each item. Except when the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer consents to a longer period, or by his actions or pleadings willfully prevents the prompt resolution of the hearing, judgment shall be rendered within ten days of the return of the warrant. If the matter is not found to be obscene or is not found to have been held or displayed for sale, exhibition, or distribution to the public, or a judgment is not entered within the time provided for, the matter shall be restored forthwith to the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer.

(2) If an appeal is taken by the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer from an adverse judgment, the case should be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way. Destruction of a matter declared forfeited shall be postponed until the judgment has become final by exhaustion of appeal, or by expiration of the time for appeal, and until the matter is no longer needed as evidence in a criminal proceeding.

(3) A determination of obscenity shall not be admissible in any criminal proceeding against any person or corporation for sale or possession of obscene matter.

4. (1) When allegedly obscene matter has been seized under a search warrant issued without a prior adversary hearing, or has been seized without a warrant, the officer, who executed the warrant or seized the matter without warrant, shall give notice of the fact of seizure to the prosecuting attorney of the county in which the matter was seized. Within three days of the seizure the prosecuting attorney shall file a written motion with the circuit court of the county or judicial district in which the seizure occurred praying for an order directing the forfeiture of the matter. Upon filing of the motion, the court shall set a date for a hearing. Written notice of date, time, place, and nature of the hearing shall be personally served upon the owner, dealer, exhibiter, displayer, or his agent. Such notice shall be served no less than five days before the hearing.

(2) If the evidence is clear and convincing that the matter is obscene as defined by law, and it was being held or displayed for sale, exhibition, distribution, or circulation to the public, the judge shall declare it to be obscene and forfeited to the state and order its destruction. However, no forfeiture shall be declared without the dealer, distributor, or displayer being given a reasonable opportunity to appear in opposition and without the judge having thoroughly examined each item. Except when the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer consents to a longer period, or by his actions or pleadings willfully prevents the prompt resolution of the hearing, judgment shall be rendered within fifteen days from the date of the seizure. If the matter is not found to be obscene, or is not found to have been held or displayed for sale, exhibition, distribution, or circulation to the public, or a judgment is not entered within the time provided for, the matter shall be restored forthwith to the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer.

(3) If an appeal is taken by the dealer, exhibiter, or displayer from an adverse judgment, the case shall be assigned for hearing at the earliest practicable date and expedited in every way. Destruction of matter declared forfeited shall be postponed until the judgment has become final by exhaustion of appeal, or by expiration of the time for appeal, and until the matter is no longer needed as evidence in a criminal proceeding.

(4) A determination of obscenity shall not be admissible in any criminal proceeding against any person or corporation for sale or possession of obscene matter.

5. An appeal by any party shall be allowed from the judgment of the court as in other civil actions.
